Read and choose the correct answer

Three inexperienced climbers injured themselves yesterday, when they fell down a steep gorge on Mount Snowdon. They were reported missing when they failed to return to their hotel last night. They survived sub-zero temperatures and had kept themselves warm by digging a hole in the snow. Rescuers had to battle through one of the worst snowstorms in years to reach the three men. "The climbers were unprepared for the bad weather and should have checked the forecast before they set off. Yesterday's weather was too foggy for climbing. You couldn't see more than two metres in front of you. It was not safe enough for climbing," said a rescuer. He also warned that climbers must be more cautious when planning difficult climbs in such weather, or there will be more accidents on the mountain.
